

- Since some people might want the same spot that is highly ranked, should spot purchasing be time-based (whoever buys the spot first) or a bid, so whoever thinks they need the spot most can place a higher bid?
    - The problem with a bid is that it might negatively impact community belittling some people or not giving people who have less money than others accessibility to certain spots
  - Faculty and security check parking passes to see if people are parked in the correct spot so to prevent confusion we could make a feature only accessible to the security where they can see who currently owns a spot and use license plate verification instead
    - This would require a license plate requirement in account creation or at some other point in time
    - License plate would be easy because everyone has a unique one
  - Email verification is used to make sure that people can't place spots for purchase that they don't own but there should be a feature that ensures the buyer can place the spot they bought back on the market because of unforeseen circumstances, such as sickness or accident that makes it so the buyer isn't using the spot they bought anymore.
